

Disability Employment Initiative (DEI)

Why the initiative...

During these difficult economic times, we want to make it possible for all workers, especially those with disabilities, to benefit from the Labor Department's employment and retraining services that have a proven success rate. Through [the Disability Employment Initiative], individuals with disabilities will be able to utilize the necessary tools to obtain permanent and secure jobs.

— Secretary of Labor
Hilda L. Solis

The unemployment rate of Americans with disabilities has steadily increased for decades. In short, hundreds of thousands of potential workers with disabilities have been unable to find employment, increasing their need for government benefits and limiting their ability to be economically self-sufficient and participate in their communities like their employed counterparts. In recent years, our public workforce system has been more systematically addressing this issue. Through a variety of pilot programs, our public workforce system has identified many promising practices for enhancing its capacity to better serve persons with disabilities and offer career pathway opportunities that provide entry to the middle class.

These successful strategies provide great potential to assist unemployed and underemployed Americans with disabilities in finding gainful employment to improve their quality of life, reduce their need for supplemental government supports and, ultimately, allow them to strengthen and improve our workforce by becoming a more active part of it. The DEI, along with similar initiatives, supports these efforts by refining and replicating promising practices throughout our public workforce system.

The DEI Design

The DEI comprises three primary components: cooperative agreements, technical assistance to the grantees and the public workforce system, and evaluation of the grantees' activities to measure their outcomes and impact on both the individuals and the system. The goal of the DEI is to improve the education, training, and employment opportunities and outcomes of youth and adults with disabilities who are unemployed, underemployed, and/or receiving Social Security disability benefits.

It improves coordination and collaboration among employment and training programs, across multiple service delivery systems, at state and local levels, and builds effective community partnerships that leverage public and private resources to better serve individuals with disabilities and improve their employment outcomes.

A joint effort of the Department of Labor’s Employment and Training Administration (ETA) and Office of Disability Employment Policy (ODEP), the DEI brings together local, state and Federal agencies, as well as community-based agencies and organizations to achieve its goals. Of particular note, the DEI requires that its grantees participate in the Social Security Administration’s (SSA) Ticket to Work Program to improve the coordination of services to customers of the public workforce system who also receive SSA disability benefits.

Since 2010, three rounds of projects have been funded for three year periods. Round One (nine) in Program Year 2010 at $22 million; Round Two (seven) in Program Year 2011 at $21 million; and a third round (seven) funded in Program Year 2012. Each grant is designed to implement successful strategies to promote the employment of either adults or youth with disabilities.
